Born, November 22d, to Mr. Sam. Redding and wife, a daughter—Kate Duval.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Rowley, of Texas, are visiting Mrs. R.'s uncle, Mr. James Carr, this week.

Little Miss Barbara Goodrich, of Harvland, is visiting her cousin, Miss Ettie Black.

Mrs. Azuba Webster returned Saturday from a visit to the family of Mr. Robert Macey, of Woodford.

Messrs. Dan. Gaines and Willie Webster, of Woodford, spent several days last week visiting friends near here.

The singing school met Saturday night and about twenty names were enrolled.

Hog killings are fashionable.

Wedding bells are ringing, two weddings this week with several couples to hear from.

Miss Julia Wallace, who is engaged in business in Frankfort, visited her father, Mr. John Wallace, Sunday.

Mrs. Katie Luckett returned Sunday from an extensive visit to her son, Mr. Jesse Hockersmith.

Mr. Albert Johnson and Miss Eva Chambers eloped from this place Tuesday, and were married in Jeffersonville, Ind., on Wednesday.

Little Miss Mary Hayden, who has been quite ill for the past two weeks, is better.

Sausage, spare-rib, souse and rabbit now fill up the bill of fare.

Col. R. P. Pepper was out the first of the week negotiating with Mr. George E. Wiley for his harness gelding, Red Tiger.

Bro. Tom was in Frankfort Tuesday, but did not get to see her. Well, may be she will not be out of town next time. Remember, faint heart never won, fair lady.

The Debating Society met last Thursday. The question was affirmed that war has injured the country more than interperence. After an interesting discussion, it was decided in favor of the affirmative.

Mr. and Mrs. F. M. Munford and little son, Master Robert, spent Sunday with Mr. and Mrs. Jack Long.

Master Ed. Galles, of Frankfort, spent several days last week visiting his cousin, Master Ovie Scantland. Master Ed. being a sportsman, the game in this region sought hiding places, and have not yet come out.

Mr. R. S. Kinkade and family left a short time since for Fort Smith, Arkansas, where they will reside in the future.

Regular services at Evergreen today at 2 p. m., and to-morrow at 11 o'clock a. m.

Messrs. Charlie Parrent and Hopkins, of Grant county, have returned home from a visit to this vicinity.

The infant of Mr. and Mrs. William Hoover died at the residence of its parents, near this place, of diphtheria Nov. 23d, 1886. This is the second child the grief-stricken ones have lost by this dread disease in one week. They have the entire sympathy of this community.

The diphtheria seems to have run its course in this section, as no new cases are reported.

The heaviest ruin of the season—in this vicinity—fell last week, causing considerable damage to those bordering on water courses.

No special religious services in this section Thanksgiving Day.

Dr. H. H. Stratton and wife have removed to their recently purchased farm, the Fore place, from Clay village.

Mr. N. P. Trilbelle and wife, of Shelby county, visited relations in this section the first of the week.

If you want bargains in the grocery and notion line, just visit the cod-fish and coal-oil store, north side Main street, Bridgeport, Ky., where the polite and accommodating Scofield will set you up.

Esq. J. B. Russell has been in Louisville since our last report.

A vast deal of sickness among the children, especially under six years of age, this fall.

The schools have resumed operation.

The infant of Mr. and Mrs. Jas. R. Sargent died of membranous croup at the residence of its parents, in Anderson county, Nov. 25, 1886.

Partridges are very scarce.

Rabbits in abundance.

The hogs slaughtered in this vicinity were fatter and larger than usual.

Mr. John H. Jenkins and family have located in Louisville.

Mr. Hurry Neal and wife, of Shelby county, also Mrs. Elizabeth Clark, of same county, have returned home from a visit to friends in this section.

Forks of Elkhorn.

Our items went astray last week.

Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Trabue, of Louisville, spent Thanksgiving with Mrs. Maria Murphy.

The woolen mills of H. Stedman & Bro. have closed for the season.

Miss Alice French spent Thanksgiving with friends in Shelby county.

Mrs. Eva Brown arrived from Prestonsburg last Thursday, and is now the guest of Mrs. Trimble.

Mr. and Mrs. S. Black have gone South, and expect to be absent several weeks.

James Thomas has arrived from his Southern tour.

Prof. Dietrick has opened a writing school here. He has 17 scholars.

Misses Annie South and Jennie Featherstone spent last Thursday with Mrs. Trimble.

Messrs. Bedford and Gallinore have a large number of fine hogs on hand that they expect to ship shortly.

Fearful weather at this present writing. George. Please examine that goose-bone again, and also the goose.

Mrs. Hugh Osborn did of consumption at the residence of Mr. Warren Clark, near Woodinke, last Monday night. The funeral took place last Wednesday, and the remains were interred with her infant child in a Swiss.

The following predictions of Professor Foster in regard to the coming winter do not agree with the goose-bone. He predicts great and destructive storms from the 1st to the 17th of December. During that time some of the most destructive winter storms of recent years will occur. These storms will be much of the nature as the great blizzard of January last. Heavy snow and high winds will greatly impede railway travel, and he advises the railways to prepare for blockades that will occur in the Western States about December 5, and reaching the Eastern States about December 9. These storms will break off the drought in the South-eastern States. There will also be energetic electrical disturbances that will affect telegraph and telephone lines. He suggests that many lives and much property can be saved from loss by making preparations for the severe weather of the storm period.

The Teachers of Franklin county met last Saturday at Steadmanville at the school house, and quite a crowd was gathered there to enjoy the exercises, which proved quite interesting and instructive. But how could it be otherwise, when such men as Thomas Hunter, Thos. Ford and Mr. Hodges spoke upon the subjects of Education, Obedience, Taxation; and such talented young ladies as Misses Mary Merna, Maggie Innis and Maggie Downey, and a score of bright scholars with dialogue, songs and essays. We regret that we were absent in the morning, and missed the first part of the programme, but we enjoyed the evening exercises very much.

A young doctor of this neighborhood, who sometimes goes to Frankfort to Church on Sunday evenings, came very near losing his horse and buggy while in that city one week ago from last Sunday night. Having occasion to go to LeCompte's drug store, he left his horse standing at the door without hitching him, and coming out shortly afterwards found him gone, with no trace of his whereabouts. The night was intensely dark and rainy, the streets awfully muddy, and the situation altogether one not calculated to inspire a person having lost a horse with good humor and pious thoughts, especially a man who had promised to be back home early that night to see a sick patient. But the doctor started on the search for the missing animal with a zeal worthy of a good cause. After an exasperating tramp of over two hours, during which all the streets, lanes and back alleys of South Frankfort were thoroughly investigated, the horse and buggy were at length both found safe and sound in a dark and unfrequented corner not far from the reservoir.

Bald Knob.

Mr. G. V. Harrod is in Louisville this week on business matters.

Mr. Neely Payton has the contract for finishing the vacant gap on the R. K. and P. B. turnpike, near W. R. Clarke's.

Times are harder, and people are taking less interest in schools out here—since Supt. Hunter's visit. Our teacher had to sell a dog for forty-five cents to buy fuel (the district is not able to make a blackboard for the school room), and also an adjacent district not able to buy one joint of stove pipe.

Mr. Jay Robinson, of Bridgeport, passed through our village last Tuesday.

Mr. Henry Rogers was in Louisville last week with his tobacco. He had money enough left (after selling his tobacco) to buy three plants peanuts.

Mr. Riley Clark sold his crop of tobacco last week at the following round prices: $5.70, $4.70, $3.05, $1.40.

The spelling at Eden last Thursday night was largely attended. The school at that place is progressing finely under the management of the accomplished lady teacher, Miss Cordie Adams.

Singings last Saturday night were at Mr. Henry Allison's, Mr. U. V. Pool's, Stoney Creek school-house, and at Mr. Chas. Peyton's.

Col. Scott's Address.

FRANKFORT, KY., Nov. 29, 1886.
Hon. Jno. L. Scott:
 SIR:—We, the undersigned, having heard with pleasure and profit to ourselves your very admirable address on the occasion of the turning over the Centennial Archives to the City of Frankfort, at the Opera House, on the 25th inst., Thanksgiving Day, and believing its publication would afford our citizens both pleasure and profit in its perusal in such form, we respectfully call upon you for a copy of said address to the end that we may have it published.

 AND OTHERS.

Mayor and Board of Councilmen of the City of Frankfort.—It is a pleasing incident in the history of Frankfort's great Centennial that Thanksgiving Day has been selected as the time for turning over the Centennial Records to you as their proper custodians, in trust for countless generations yet unborn. It was in the original plan of the Centennial that this agreeable service should have taken place as part of those most interesting public ceremonies which were observed in the presence of assembled thousands, in the State House square, on the 6th of October; but more important features filled the printed programme for that occasion, and we are here to-day, still filled with all the delightful memories of that delightful event, to discharge this trust, and wind up our glorious Centennial: to bid farewell—a long, loving and last farewell—to the century that has gone, and to hail with becoming joy the new century that rises to our view.

As early as April, in maturing the general plans of the Centennial, the thought occurred to me, that Kentucky's Capital City, at the close of her first century, was in possession of sufficient culture and intelligence to justify her people in making what some have called a new departure in celebrating her first Centennial—that we might venture a step beyond mere decorations, barbecues, street parades, Martha Washington balls and other mere physical charms and delights of a single day, and while not ignoring any of these, still look beyond them all to something more enduring—something that would not perish with the hour, or pass away with the passing day—something that would remain as a permanent blessing to ourselves and to our children, and to our children's children, and serve to recall the principal facts and features of an entire century long after the pleasant feasting, the joyous music and dancing, the gorgeous pageantry of the street parade, the agreeable memories of all the friendly meetings and greetings of 30,000 happy people are forgotten forever.

With such thoughts as these in my mind I took the liberty of addressing a circular letter to the principal public officers, heads of departments, churches, schools, corporations and societies in Frankfort, as well as to a large number of our oldest and most intelligent citizens, requesting them to prepare and furnish written reports covering such material facts and incidents as were to be found within their reach, in any way connected with the history of Frankfort since the town was established.

The highest compliment that can be paid to the intelligence and culture of our people may be found in the fact, that this new feature, in so planning a Centennial as to gather together into one body all the material facts, literature and history of an entire century, so as to make the celebration a permanent blessing, found such favor with our chief officers and citizens, that before the Centennial took place I had received such well prepared papers, essays, poems and statistical reports from the highest officers and best people in the State, down to the humble, but honest keeper of the wooden bridge, and such reports from the various churches, schools, corporations and citizens as in my humble judgment make such a record as exists nowhere else in the entire south.

In receiving this trust from my hands you have the right to know what I am turning over to your keeping, and I will give you a somewhat general schedule: the list is quite too lengthy to permit me to so much as call even the names of all who have contributed these reports.

PARTIAL LIST OF PAPERS TURNED OVER.

In the first place, you will find the large Centennial Register, presented by John C. Herndon, a former citizen of Frankfort, now a member of the publishing house of Bradley & Gilbert Co., of Louisville. This book is made of the most durable material, weighs some 60 pounds and is believed to be large enough to contain the registry of 25,000 or 30,000 persons, and is so arranged and ruled as to allow each person to give his post-office address and business, with the names of his father, mother and children, with a sufficient space for incidental remarks of interest concerning his family or himself. In this register may be found the names of several thousand of our best people, with such biographical and statistical remarks concerning themselves or their families or other matters as they were pleased to put on record.

The large desk on which this register rests was presented by Staten & Dehoney, a furniture firm on St. Clair street. The desk is of pure Kentucky black walnut, and was manufactured by the Mason & Ford Co., at the Kentucky Penitentiary. It contains between 30 and 40 large sized pigeon holes, or boxes, as you will observe, suitable for preserving the Centennial reports. The work on this desk, including the gift lettering, was done by two life convicts in the prison.

The 70 or 80 statistical, scientific, prose and poetical reports so contributed, and found in this desk, were prepared by as many different officers, ministers, scholars and citizens of culture and ability, and all handed to me with the understanding that in due time they should be turned over to the authorities of the City of Frankfort, and preserved in some proper way, not merely to please and refresh the glowing memories of those who were present and participated in the grand Centennial ceremonies, which called forth these remarkable productions, but preserved for the use and benefit of future ages.

These records cover a wide field—a vast empire—and embrace almost every material fact and striking incident in any way connected with Frankfort and her citizens during the first 100 years of her eventful existence.

They contain the original contract under which the carpenters built the old Love House, on Wapping Street, near the Cotton Factory. This contract was written in 1784, and the paper is well preserved and but little inferior to the paper of the present day. The old house has perished, and Jas. G. Dudley now resides in a handsome mansion standing on the same spot. This old house had a history and has it yet, although the building itself has long since crumbled to dust; for this was the house in which Aaron Burr and his co-conspirators held there midnight cabals to devise ways and means to destroy the young Republic, which it was their sworn duty to support; and the same house in which the rural belle of the village afterwards danced the horn-pipe and minuet with the wandering King of France, while he was a common tramp in the then wilderness of America. Poor wandering king, with his crown and his diamonds trampled under foot on one side of the ocean, and his affections scorned on the other by a plain girl in a calico dress.

They also show in what year the wooden bridge was built, and the names of every keeper from that day to this; and how many generations of the poor have been supplied with their winter's wood from the generous drift-pile above the piers; when the first and second State Houses were burned in 1811 and 1824, and even the time of day when the fires occurred, and the very sluggish mode of managing fires in that day, when fire-engines and hook and ladder companies were unknown; the year in which La Fayette honored Frankfort with a visit; and not only the year, but the very day and hour and the very spot, when and where Beauchamp was hung for the assassination of Sharpe; who drove the cart, and who tied the rope, and the names of those whose curiosity prompted them to be present on the hill to see a human being hung, who would have died himself in a few hours without the aid of either the hangman or the rope; also the year that Santa Ana was here on his way to Washington City, as a prisoner of war, after the battle of San Jacinto; and how he and General Almonte staid all night at the old Stephens tavern, two miles from town, with the names of the hero worshippers who were graciously permitted to sleep in the same house, and even in the same room that night, and what a good-looking large and straight and tall Indian Almonte was; where the celebrated school-house of Keene O'Hara stood on the public square; and where B. B. Sayre and Phillip S. Fall kept their separate academies in those days, and trained the boys and girls who have since adorned the best society, and honored the State; when the first steam-boat was seen on the Kentucky river, where she was built, how much she cost, and who piloted her from Frankfort to Bear Grass; the year in which the wonderful railroad cars first came down the hill, who came in them, and how many mules were required to pull them back up the hill again, on their way to Lexington; how many high tides we have had in the Kentucky river since 1817, as marked by Frank Wurtz, on his cedar post at the lock, and how many feet or inches the one was higher or lower than the other, and what days of the week and even the hours of the day when the waters began to fall; the exact number of the celebrated Milan fishing-reels that have been manufactured in the last quarter of a century; in what countries on this and the other side of the ocean they have been used, and the average price for which they have been sold to the lovers of the sport; also the names of those brave boys who, in obedience to their country's call, went to Mexico under Capt. Milan, 40 years ago, and the sad, short list of the only ones of this gallant company of soldiers who are still alive and able to answer the roll call.

If the future searcher of these records should tire of mere details, and prefer to take in, at a single glance, a beautiful view of the main features of the entire century, by way of relief to an overcrowded brain, he could not do better than glance over the early recollections of the Capital City, as given by Carter Coleman, Landon Thomas, Joseph Bell, H. G. Banta, Capt. H. I. Todd, Judge Hord, Dennis and John Halsey, John B. Lindsey, Jeff. Mayhall and Sanford Goin. These reminiscences will serve to recall many grand facts and thrilling incidents, which would have been wholly lost but for this new departure, in so planning Centennials, as to leave something for posterity, after the gay crowd has dispersed. A careful study of the masterly oration of Col. John Mason Brown would lead the mind in the same general direction, and supply many a gem of unknown or long forgotten adventure, in the days of Boone and Kenton, while the sparkling odes of Major Stanton and Rev. Gilby C. Kelly, cause the cannon to roar again at the opening of Centennial day; the grand procession carrying the industries of our entire population to move again through the streets in imagination, and decorate the whole city again as a bride adorned for her husband; while the more elaborate poem of Mrs. Eudora South invites to a contemplation of all that is elevated and noble in the highest type of manhood, and kindles in the heart those lofty aspirations intended by a kind providence as premonitions of exalted and useful lives.

But, should all these fields of thought, displaying for the most part only the works and adventures of man as a distinct being, still fall short of the expectations of the refined student, and have only the effect to create a desire to take a stroll into that softer and purer empire, where woman's elevating character is seen, and where woman's power and influence are supreme, and where her works and her life stand out "alone like Adam's recollection of his fall," as he left the garden, let him read and re-read Mrs. Morton's ode to the mothers of Frankfort—an ode which does credit alike to the head and the heart of that gifted daughter of song.

When I was younger than I am now, I spent whole hours in studying the "Hermit," by Goldsmith, and in working my feelings up to believe with him, that it was possible for a man to so give way to his impulses of remorse, as to make him lose all faith in human-kind, and seek the caves and deserts of the earth, with scarcely a desire to live, and without the courage to die, but riper years bring serious doubts, whether that person ever lived who saw no good in men; but if Goldsmith was right, and such a character as he draws should stumble upon these records—one who would not stretch forth his hand to snatch from oblivion the most gifted product of the human brain to bless the coming ages; I say, if there be such a man, and he has not yet passed the boundary of hope, for his own good he should repair to yonder hill, and read on the tablets there the silent plaudits to well spent lives; and after having been awakened to a serious apprehension of a more exalted existence, he should seat himself with Col. Tom Ford's immortal poem in his hand, beneath the shadow of the State monument, whose symmetrical shaft is covered on all sides with deeds of honor, performed by men reserved by fate for a glorious manhood, and there learn and resolve to imitate those graces of character and virtues of life found, approved and recorded even on the tomb. Such a man could read with profit, on such an occasion, the wonderful ode to "our city of the dead," which you will hear read so eloquently to-day by Miss Nannie Browder, and in contemplating the scenes around him, be brought to realize, in some degree at least, the truth of the couplet, that

"Glory guards and genius weeps
 Where Theodore O'Hara sleeps."

Such are some of the rich treasures found in these records. In the name, and by the authority of the present generation of living people, they are now handed over to your keeping, but generations yet unborn will demand of you and of your successors, their preservation and their proper use. They will increase in value and grow in the affections of the people as the years roll by. It is a continuing trust, and at the next Centennial, 100 years hence (if time shall continue), they will be demanding in all their perfection at the hands of those who shall succeed you in these honorable offices.

And may the God of centuries, who of His goodness has put it into the hearts of this people to gather these treasures together, enable you and those who come after you, to preserve them for the common good, until both years and centuries, having performed those high purposes for which they were ordained, shall, at His command, disappear as a vapor and fade away like an evening sunset into that brighter and better part of our existence whose eternal empire lies almost in sight across the mystic river.

FRANKFORT ROUNDABOUT.

Entered at the post-office at Frankfort, Kentucky, as second-class matter.

GEORGE A. LEWIS.
Editor and Publisher.

FRANKFORT, DECEMBER 4, 1886.

Rev. George Darsie closed his pastorate of the Christian Church on Sunday, the Church being filled to its utmost capacity at both the morning and evening services, with congregations composed of all denominations in the city, and when the beloved minister spoke his farewell words to the people with whom he has labored so faithfully for the past ten years, the tearful eyes and suppressed sobs of his hearers gave ample testimony to the strong hold he has upon the affections of the people of this community. Rev. G. C. Kelly, of the Methodist Church, in token of his appreciation of Mr. Darsie as a man and Christian, held no services at night, and together with a large number of his congregation attended the evening services, and sat with Mr. Darsie in the pulpit. Prominent members of the other Churches in the city were also present to hear the last words of this faithful servant of God. His text was well chosen, and the sermon the equal of his many excellent discourses; but when in the closing sentences he alluded to the fact of his being the last time he should stand before his beloved congregation his voice almost filled him, and when the benediction was pronounced the large concourse filed out of the house with sad hearts at the thought that the Church had lost an earnest, faithful pastor and the community an energetic, public spirited citizen.

The Church to which Mr. Darsie goes is a young one, which will pay him a much smaller salary than he received here, his labors being much more onerous, and only a stern sense of duty he owed to the Master he so zealously served impelled him to sever his connection with a people to whom he is as devotedly attached as they are to him.

Mr. Darsie left on Thursday evening for Pittsburg, where he will remain a few days, and thence proceed to Boston.

Death of H. H. Murray.

Mr. Henry H. Murray, an old citizen of this county, died suddenly on Friday morning, at his home in Taylorton, of a congestive chill. He had long been prominent as a man of fine business capacity, energetic and stirring, and was held in the highest respect and esteem by all who knew him. He was born in 1811 in the old frame tavern, which stood upon the hill a short distance from the present entrance to the cemetery, and in early life learned the tailor's trade with George Winebrunner, his half brother, and was working at the business when John U. Waring killed J. Q. Richardson, in the old Mansion House, and being appointed to guard Waring, took his work with him to the jail, and plied his needle while on duty. He next engaged in turnpike building with his brother-in-law, the late Robert Brawner, and shortly after the railroad was built between this city and Lexington, and while the cars were being drawn by horse power, he was made Road Master, and held the position until about 1870, when he resigned his position and went into the saw-mill business in this city. In token of their appreciation of his long and efficient services, the railroad company presented him with a handsome silver service. He remained in the saw-mill business but a short time, and his slave devoted his attention to his farm.

He was thrice married, his first wife being Mrs. Isminger, his second Miss Margaret Whitehead, and his last wife Miss Jane Jilison, who together with three sons, Mr. W. H. Murray, by the first marriage, and Mr. J. A. and Dr. John W. Murray, by the second, still survive him.

The work on the South Frankfort sewer is being pushed along, notwithstanding the cold weather.

To-day the registered voters of the city will select three gentlemen from each ward to manage the affairs of the city for two years from the first of January. Those selected may be energetic and untiring in their efforts to so conduct the affairs of the city that the taxes will be reduced, the city improved and her outstanding indebtedness reduced, but no thanks and never a cent will they receive for the valuable time they may devote to these objects. However, they will be "cussed" all the same as if they did nothing.

In view of the fact that the mercury dropped down to six degrees above zero on Wednesday morning and went still lower yesterday morning, we are inclined to think that Prof. G. Bone, that we interviewed last week with regard to the weather, must have been a little mixed in his prognostications.

Rev. G. H. Burks, Pastor of the St. John A. M. E. Church, and Misses Roxborough, Roberson and Joyce have organized a Home Mission Relief Society for the benefit of the destitute children and the aged poor of Frankfort, and ask the hearty co-operation of the benevolent public in this much needed work.

The work on the new City School Building is progressing rapidly, but the schools will hardly be opened there on the first of January. The building is one of the handsomest of the kind in the State, and is an ornament the city may well be proud of.

Superior to Anything.

A prominent business man in Wilmington, Del., in speaking of a cure of cancer on himself, writes to the Morning News of that City:

I can say further that my cure is not an isolated one. A lady, a cancerous affection of the nose. She had spent a great deal of money and time running to Philadelphia to consult the best physicians there, but could get little or no relief. About a year ago I told her of my case, and induced her to try the S. S. S. remedy. She did so, and in a few weeks was much better. She had several operations performed, and was disposed to hold on to her old treatment as well as the new, but finally she threw all aside but the S. S. S., and two months from that time was thoroughly cured.

Another lady suffering from an abscess on her arm had been doctoring for a long time in this city, Chester and Philadelphia, but could not get on away to a mere shadow of her former self, and could scarcely eat or sleep. She commenced to take the S. S. S. medicine, upon the advice of friends and myself, but was so repelled in flesh that she had a little stomach trouble at first. She persisted, however, and after the third bottle she declared it had done her more good than anything else she had ever tried. I now understand that she is entirely well, and is loud in her praise of S. S. S.

I have several other cases in my mind, but am not at liberty to speak of them. I believe the Swift Specific Co.'s blood medicine known as S. S. S. is superior to anything of the kind known in the market, and can cheerfully recommend it to any one suffering from diseases of the blood or skin.
